

McKenna Called Miller Turn

By BOB BEEBE

The Millers are in the Little World Series and there is one man entitled to say "I told you so." He is Tom McKenna, the trainer.

More than a month ago, when the Minneapolis club was not exactly setting the world on fire, "the Healer" declared one night in his rubbing room: "Maybe we don't look too good right now, but mark my words: If we get into the playoff we'll win it. We've got the pitching."

Tommy never weakened on that statement and the Millers made him look good by battling through two playoff series in 10 games.

The pitching was great but it wasn't the whole story. The club that was a bad last in the American Association team batting this season with a .248 average wound up the playoff with a robust .301 mark after bashing Denver pitching for 34 hits in the last two games.

Meanwhile, the Millers were scheduled to work out today with the knowledge that it will be at least Wednesday night before they will know their series opponent. Toronto stalled any Montreal ideas of an International league finals sweep by winning 9-3 Monday to leave the Royals leading 2-1.

Veteran pitcher Eddie Blake held Montreal to seven hits last night and drove in three runs with a homer and two singles. The Leafs collected 15 hits, routing former DIAMOND DUST: Miller pitcher Dean Stone fortunately suffered no ill effects from being hit on the kneecap by Zeke Bella's line drive in Denver Saturday night. He would have pitched Monday if a fifth game had been needed . . .

Denver fans will be talking a long time about Minneapolis' epic comeback from a 12-3 deficit that night and also about Mauch's incessant juggling of his lineup . . . At one stage, Bear manager Andy Cohen asked Gene: "Doesn't your pitcher ever come to bat?" . . . And Mauch summed up afterward: "I made some mistakes along the way but we won and actually finished up with close to our best defensive lineup on the field." . . .

Schmidt 'Jinx' Is Gagne Target

Vern Gagne, former University of Minnesota and Olympic wrestling great, currently rated the No. 1 challenger to Dick Hutton's world heavyweight championship, claims there are only two matches in his professional career he wishes he could re-live.

Both were against Hans Schmidt. He lost both of them. His opponent in tonight's main event at the Au-lilio DiPaolo, recovered from a neck injury sustained three weeks ago, will oppose Joe Pazandak in the semi-windup.

Other matches will send Tex McKenzie against Clem St. Louis, Lee Henning against Al Mills and Ivan the Terrible against Red Bastien of Hopkins.

First bout will start at 8 p.m., half an hour earlier than previously. Channel 11
