'As I Was Saying ...'

Andy To Be Missing at First

THE SUN KINGS will have a new manager and some new players this year. They'll play under some new rules. Some of the fans will be new, too. (A lot of old and new ones, is the fond hope of the front office.)

Andy Cohen won't make that dog trot to first base coaching line and make certain that he follows the prescribed path which takes him just inside home plate. To go any other route would jinx the Kings.

Since George Genovese came here as manager in 1961, Andy has been helping out as coach of the Kings in home games. He's worked under Genovese, Dave Garcia, Chuck Tanner and Rocky Bridges.

This year, Del Rice is the manager. And Andy won't be back.

Doesn't Know Way to San Jose

EL PASO'S NO. 1 baseball man has gotten his release. The most probable explanation is that the California Angels did it for economy reasons or they may have other personnel plans along that line.

Whatever they are, the separation of Andy Cohen from some of his "moonlighting" leaves no bitter taste.

"I enjoyed it," said Andy. "Maybe I helped some of the kids. The Angels maybe just cut down or maybe they have other plans. There are no sour grapes on my part."

Showing that the release was no reflection on Cohen, the Angels offered Andy the managing job of their California affiliate, San Jose.

"I couldn't accept it without leaving my bread and butter job here," Andy said. He might have said, his beer and pretzel job. He's connected with a beer distributor.

"I had no intentions of letting it be publicly known that I had turned down the San Jose job," Andy said. "I didn't want it to be known to whoever did take the job that he was second choice. But it came out."

The new San Jose manager is Tom Morgan, former Yankee pitcher who has been a pitching coach for the California Angel farm system.

Big Opportunity for 'Moose'

LARRY (MOOSE) STUBING'S status is a little indefinite. The Angels have sent him a contract. He's not signed it. There's a difference in what Stubing wants and what the Angels have offered.

They told him they might want to send him to Hawaii to pinch-hit for Chuck Tanner's Islanders.

But Moose doesn't want to go that far away and stay away any longer than a Texas League road trip. He's established in the insurance business here.

He'd like to remain with the El Paso club as pinch-hitter, player-coach and utility fielder.

Under the new "wild card" pinch-hitting rules this season, the Moose would be more valuable than ever to a team. It would even be possible for him to go to bat nine times in a game—once in each inning. He'd like that.
