Colorado State University and U.T. El Paso are playing for the Western Athletic Conference baseball championship this season. But despite the fact that the Rams from Fort Collins, Colo. won 8-7 in the opening game of their series at Dudley Field, there was no profit or loss for either team in WAC play.

CSU is in the northern division of the WAC and the Miners are in the southern division. Inter-division games don't count in the race until the playoff is held among the two winners.

THE RAMS and Miners ended their series in a single game today.

Walks proved costly for the Miners and helpful for the Rams in the opener. Rams batters worked Miner pitchers for nine bases on balls.

"That was the difference," said Andy Cohen of the Miners. "We gave up too many walks."

Coach Irv Ferguson of CSU agreed that the walks helped his team but said, "we came through with hits when we needed them."
