

Marc Expended; Miners Win First

Coach Andy Cohen of the U.T. El Paso Miners expected to run into a pitching shortage today when the Miners faced New Mexico in a doubleheader at Dudley Field.

The Miners held a one game lead in the series today behind the bat of Rick Butler and the arm of Marc Bombard by defeating the Lobos 11-9.

COHEN'S RIGHTHANDERS were the question this afternoon when the two met. In yesterday's encounter Cohen hadn't planned to use Bombard but did anyway which gave him the series lead. So now he has one lefty, Lynn Hunt and his righthanders, whom two have sore arms.

Cohen said, "Yesterday's game was a 50-50 split between Butler's bat and Bombard's arm. Butler drove in seven runs including two homers, and Bombard came in to stop their rally."

Bombard came in the game in the top of the eighth inning with Miners ahead 11-9. But the Lobos had struck for two singles leaving men on first and third with no outs. Bombard struck out the first and made the next two pop up.

Carr Plays Old Role As Wrecker

Fred Carr, often a one-man wrecking crew when he was a linebacker for the U.T. El Paso Miners, will try to wreck the Miner varsity tonight in the Sun Bowl.

He's the big defensive star of the Miner alumni who'll meet Bobby Dobbs' varsity-men at 7:45 p.m.

Carr, now with the Green Bay Packers, will operate as the strong side linebacker for the Alumni with Wayne Smith stationed at the middle linebacker-spot and Denver Sample (Falcons) on the weak side.

THE OTHER SIDE of the story was Butler. He homered in the fourth and sixth innings with men on each time. The first circuit he had two and the second trip he had one on. In the first inning he also had a single that drove in two runs.

When a relief pitcher goes into the game in late innings with men on base and the decision for the win or loss, it is judgment on who gets the win. Cohen gave this win to Bombard despite the lead Bill Disselhorst had when he left the game.

"It's one of those decisions of who did the best job and Bombard did," Cohen said.

This was the Lobos fifth straight loss which left them with 2-8 WAC record and 28-13 season mark. The Miners are 3-7 in the WAC and 15-20 for the season.
