SPORT SCENE

San Francisco, Cal., July 22
(Via Air Mail)

Seeing San Francisco is a delightful way to end a holiday. Today we had lunch at Joe DiMaggio's on Fisherman's Wharf. We took the Powell St. cable car to Chinatown to do some shopping before returning to our hotel to rest our weary feet.

Yesterday was a day to remember. We found our way, by bus, to Candlestick Park for our first look at the San Francisco Giants' brand new ball park. We never expected to see such a game — it was the Phils' third game and Gene Mauch's men had dropped the first two games. Robin Roberts pitched what we would consider a no-hitter but what became officially a one-hit performance. The visitors won 3-0, you may recall.

We were interested in many of the players who performed for Buffalo and now are in Philly uniforms. Herrera and Amaro both played and looked very good. Old Andy Cohen was the third-base coach and Catcher Coker and Outfielder Del Greco were ready to go in against a left-handed pitcher. Former Bison pitchers, Green and Short, had pitched in a losing cause the night before. Hoby Landrith, whom we believe also played with Buffalo, was the Giant catcher.

Candlestick Park is a wonderful stadium but all the natives here are asking who picked out the site. The architect says he didn't. It may be the only ball park in existence where fans can come by boat and tie up at a pier at the parking lot.

We had the pleasure of seeing two ball games at Los Angeles before coming here. The Dodgers looked unbeatable while winning from the Giants 10 to 0, and from League Leading Pittsburgh, 5 to 4. We also were able to see three games over TV from Candlestick Park Giants vs. Dodgers, including the one held up 25 minutes by fog.

A strange thing has happened in L. A. — the broadcaster of Dodger games, Vince Scully, is more popular than the Dodger players. We thought it was a special "night" for the hard-of-hearing at the Coliseum the other evening, everyone seemed to be wearing a hearing aid. It developed that fans carry a pocket-size transistor radio with ear phone. No one wants to miss a word that the darling of the air pronounces. There must have been 8 or 10 transistor radios of one kind or another around us at the game.

To return to the Candlestick Park story. It was a beautiful day yesterday but we wore top coats and gloves. Although we were comfortable we ended with a very cold right ear. The young lady in the next seat stopped keeping score — she returned the pencil we loaned her — said her hands were too cold to write any more.

Last night we ended the day by attending the musical Music Man at the Opera House.

We will be on our way home Monday having booked a jet-pass to Chicago. We look forward to this trip and to being home again. Like all travelers we will enjoy returning home as much as anything we have done.
