

Tunis Nominates Mele For Future Manager

Volunteer author Angelo Tunis' subject is baseball. With good reason. Since man and juvenile the product of Scranton's North End has made baseball his life. The last decade as a trainer. He's presently at Indianapolis after a winding tour of the lower minors, starting at Carbondale and pausing in New Orleans, where Tunis won himself a bride.

Explaining that "this is my last chance to write before we hit the road for Louisville, Charleston, Omaha, Denver and St. Paul," Tunis swings for the towns far apart. We travel by plane 98 per cent of the time and a 1,500 mile hop is no trouble. Ed Doherty rules this domain and has considerable sentiment for the American League presidency when Mr. Harridge retires.

"Like most leagues attendance isn't what you'd like it to be, but the AA manages to keep going. Business perked when Andy Cohen, who always kept the boys hustling, won eight out of nine at home, aided by Jim McDonald's return. Jim was out about three weeks with a pulled back muscle. Our franchise is owned by 6,672 fans and they are a faithful lot.

"Sam Mele isn't playing regularly but he's still a good man. I think he will make a fine manager. See John Kucab when we meet Denver. He's listed as the batting practice pitcher in Monday's All Star game at Wichita. Glad to see Kucab's neighbor Nester Chylak get into the majors All Star party.

"Looking forward to visiting my mother at the end of the season. By that time my wife, and our youngster, will be back from New Orleans. Speaking of the South, a considerable number of your friends were inquiring about your health, during Spring training. I took the liberty of telling them you would get well, and do, as the medicos advise."
