

Control Improves With New Vision

By LESTER KOELLING

Barry Latman "abandoned pride" last night, wore eye glasses and hurled one of his better games for the Indianapolis Indians.

In tossing an eight-hit 7-3 victory over St. Paul, the young right-hander fanned 10, a new season high for Indianapolis pitchers, and kept the Indians in the first division by a half game.

"I've had the glasses for two years," said Latman, "but never got up enough courage to wear them in a game. I guess it was just pride. They helped me a lot tonight, so I guess I'll keep wearing 'em when I'm pitching."

Latman went the route for only the third time in nine starts while winning his fifth victory and showed some improvement over his greatest weakness—control.

"When that kid masters control, he has a chance of becoming a great pitcher," said Manager Andy Cohen. "He's getting better, and once he finds that groove he should not have any trouble winning."

Latman

Latman's big fault is getting behind on the count with batters. Last night, for example, he was behind 3-0 twice to one batter and then fanned him. But on other occasions, he wasn't so successful.

His outing was made a bit easier last night by a 4-run Tribe outburst in the first inning that routed Glenn McMinn, an old knuckleball nemesis for Indianapolis clubs. Five hits went into that production of runs, and the Indians added six more against Chuck Templeton, a southpaw reliever.

But the hit total contained only one extra-base blow—a triple by Ron Jackson for two runs in the sixth. Latman's chief tormentor was Granny Gladstone, who homered in the second—his first of the season—singled for a run in the sixth, and singled again and scored in the ninth.

The series windup with the Saints is scheduled for tonight when "Railroad Night" will be observed. More than 500 employees of railroads serving Indianapolis will occupy a special section and wear engineer caps. Pregame ceremonies will start at 7:30.
