

19 Runs and What Did We Get? One, That's All

By LESTER KOELLING

There's one thing about getting drubbed 18-1; anything you do thereafter will be an improvement.

With that in mind, the Indianapolis Indians will be in a vengeful mood tonight when they face the Denver Bears in the series finale. They will need to be to stay in fifth place and in position to regain fourth during a three-game series with Omaha, starting at 2:30 tomorrow and to the accompaniment of The News Newsboys' Band.

The Bears did everything but steal a base last night, and they didn't need to do that, as they administered the most humiliating defeat of the season to the Indians. Their 20 hits were of every known variety—bloops and blasts, dribblers and bad bouncers. It was, without doubt, the Bears' night to howl.

Through it all, the Indians kept their heads up; they never quit trying. But the massacre was more than at least one fan could endure. A rather portly individual occupying a front row box near Denver's dugout, fell fast asleep midway through the game. Coach Johnny Hutchings tried unsuccessfully to awaken him. An usher finally succeeded before the sleepy-head could be swept from the park by the janitors.

Some third-base fans appeased their disappointment by making caustic suggestions to Manager Andy Cohen and the Indians. One of them cracked "Why did'ya trip him, Andy?" when Jose Valdivielso slipped and fell in the mud while rounding third base. Another reminded Cohen that he had seen a track meet in the afternoon and had hoped to see a "baseball game tonight."

Those remarks and incidents failed to stir the humor in the Indians, who were feeling badly enough in becoming an unwilling punching bag for other American Association clubs. Just a week before they served as sparring partners for the lowly Louisville Colonels. Later, Minneapolis got on its feet at the expense of the Tribe after losing three to St. Paul, and now Denver.

Someone suggested that the Bears were due for an outburst like last night; that they were a far better club than the records indicate.

"We were just due to explode," said a visiting writer. "Our pitchers had allowed an earned run average of 2.16 in eight games before coming here, yet we won only two games. We were just due."

True as the observation may have been, it somehow lacked a comforting affect to listeners.

Coach Proves Who's Tops in Tennis Game

In tennis, as in other sports, the coach usually has the last word, and that's the way it turned out yesterday in the final of the G.I. Singles at Riverside. Roland Leverenz, Tech High School coach, whipped Clint Parsons, Butler University's captain, 8-6, 5-7, 6-4, for the title.

The Bears hadn't won three straight all season until last night; they hadn't scored more than 13 runs until last night, and hadn't obtained more than 18 hits until last night. In fact, few recalled the Bears being in the league until they came to Indianapolis.
