AN ALL-STAR PROBLEM

MINNEAPOLIS—Something of a problem is confronting the July 15 American Association All-Star game which only Omaha or Denver can solve.

The host team will be the club leading the league after the July 4 games, and if either Minneapolis or St. Paul is in that position, the press, players and dignitaries attending the event may have to bed at the Stadium.

Minneapolis is host to the National Shrine convention at that time and all hotel rooms and motels in the Twin City area are booked solid for the occasion. Ironically, St. Paul never has had an All-Star game and this easily could be the year.

If Wichita qualifies for the All-Star game, the league stands to lose a good chunk of money because the Wichita park can't accommodate a crowd large enough to bear the expenses of the game.

Thus, the answer seems to lie with either Omaha or Denver, both of which are in position to drive to the top by the morning of July 5. An all-time record crowd of 19,769 witnessed last year's All-Star game at Denver and while Omaha probably couldn't match that figure, it would do considerably better than 10,000.

Voting for the All-Star team will start next week and will be done by members of the Writers' Association and by broadcasters doing regular play-by-play. Each city will be allowed one unit vote.

A severe storm brought a welcome rainout to Manager Andy Cohen's battered Indianapolis Indians last night, but it created a double-header for tonight followed by another Sunday afternoon.

A rundown on the casualties follows:

Neil Chrisley—Taking treatments for twisted back muscle and may miss several games.

Charley Williams—Aggravated an injured kneecap in the last game at Denver. May be forced to play but will not be at top physical condition.

Jose Valdivielso—Cast is still on left forearm and he figures to miss entire Minneapolis series and part of Wichita series.

Jim Delsing—Has been playing with right leg taped from hip to ankle. Inability to get proper rest is slowing healing of pulled leg muscle.

Jim McDonald—Still on disabled list, but has been throwing a little batting practice. Back still sore and it may be another week before he can take regular turns on mound.
