

It's Bad Evening for Umps, Indians

By LESTER KOELLING News Sportswriter

WICHITA—It is a tossup as to who can be blamed the most—Umpire Bill Kinnamon, Manager Andy Cohen, Ron Jackson or Jose Valdivielso.

Each contributed something to the heart-breaking 10-inning, 3-2 defeat suffered here last night by the Indianapolis Indians, who apparently had the baseball game won, 2-1, with two out in the ninth.

Koelling

The first boo-boo was pulled by Kinnamon, who took a home run away from John Romano in the fourth inning. With that homer the Indians would have won, 3-2, in nine, instead of losing by the same score in 10.

Romano's drive seemingly cleared the left-field wall fair by several feet, but Kinnamon delayed his call until the ball was well out of the park and curving downward. Then he called it foul.

Kinnamon also missed what looked like a perfect down-the-middle third strike on Harry Hanebrink in the 10th. The Wichita infielder then singled over the winning run. Judging from the numerous squawks by both teams, that was one of many pitches that Kinnamon missed.

But in between the Kinnamon rocks there were other things that shouldn't have happened either. Jackson, for example, dropped a throw from Valdivielso on the first Wichita batter in the ninth, the error eventually leading to the tying run.

Some were inclined to absolve Jackson of blame on this play, claiming that Valdivielso merely "lobbed" the ball to first instead of "putting something" on the throw. Either way, it was perhaps the Tribe's easiest fielding play of the night.

The next two batters were retired on popups for what should have ended the game, but a hit prolonged life for the Braves. Red Murff, a pitcher, approached the plate as a right-handed pinch-hitter, and Manager Cohen made the move that has backfired several times.

Roy Tinney had pitched splendidly, as he has done on each outing of this trip, but Cohen played percentage by bringing in a right-handed pitcher, George Spencer. Seldom has Spencer retired the first batter when summoned into relief in situations as this. And this was no exception.

Manager Ben Gerahty had countered by replacing Murff with Bob Hartsheld, a left-handed batter, and the weak hitter walloped a long double to right center on the second pitch, sending over the tying run.

Only brilliant fielding and a remarkable throw by Ted Beard, with a relay to the plate by Vince Garcia, prevented the Braves from winning then and there. The second runner was nailed at the plate by several feet.

This was Tinney's third appearance in the last week, twice as a starter. In those outings he has allowed only four runs, three earned, in 21 innings.
