The taped-up Indianapolis Indians and their patched-up lineup will return to the sanity of one game at Victory Field tonight in their climb toward the first division.

It will be a 7:45 contest against the Charleston Senators with Cloyd Boyer doing the pitching. The game will be sponsored by the Daughters of Isabella.

Koelling

At 1:01 this morning, the Indians walked off the field with a 5-4 victory in 7½ innings to give them a sweep of a double bill with the Senators. They had won the scheduled seven-inning first game, 3-2, with two out in the 12th.

Between the two games, more than an hour was consumed by a Park Department program featuring children of all ages in various stunts. The prolonged program, good as it was, began preying on the patience of patrons whose shouts of "play ball" drowned out two brief speakers in the closing minutes. It was unfortunate for everyone, except the Indians, that the first game had to go 12 innings.

The sweep, running the Tribe's home stand record to 14 victories in 20 games, vaulted the Indians back into fifth place ahead of Denver and to within two games of fourth-place St. Paul. But it was a long and stormy night before all that was accomplished.

The Senators stormed the umpires when Ted Beard slid safely into home from first on Ron Jackson's two-bagger in the 12th. Jose Valdivielso stormed to the mound with clenched fists when he was hit by a pitched ball by John Tsitouris in the second game, and neither the Indians were sure they had won, nor the Senators they had lost, when play was stopped in the second game because of the league curfew.

League rules stipulate that no inning may start after 12:50 a.m. After Jackson's 14th homer in the seventh (a blow that turned out to be the winning run), the Indians took the field at 12:48 for the start of the eighth inning. The Indians could have "stalled out" those few minutes during their turn at bat, but as Manager Andy Cohen explained later, he was under the impression that it would be a "suspended game" and finished at a later date.

It could have been costly, as the Senators scored twice in the eighth on Mel Clark's homer and had two runners on base when Jim Delsing made a running catch of Al Facchini's liner and turned it into a double play. Charleston also was laboring under the false impression of a suspended game.

The Indians came from a 2-0 deficit to tie the score in the seventh and scheduled last inning. John Romano's single, Sam Hairston's double, an infield out and Boyer's pinch

BEARD LEADS AA BATTERS

Ted Beard is the official American Association batting leader, it was revealed today by Howe News Bureau, which keeps the official records of the league.

According to Howe figures, Beard is credited with 111 hits in 330 at-bats for a .336 average, one percentage point ahead of Denver's Norm Siebern. Other statisticians, including the Associated Press, have been carrying Beard with 332 at-bats and 111 hits for .334.

sacrifice fly made it an overtime contest. Valdivielso opened the second game scoring with his first homer of the season. Later scoring contributions included Beard's triple and Garcia's two-bagger.

On the pitching front, there was much to be said, and appreciated. Jim McDonald worked seven fine innings in the opener and Roy Tinney was more than adequate in relief. But George Spencer, under the rules, became the winner when he fanned the only batter he faced.

During a crisis in the 12th, Spencer was summoned to pitch to right-hand hitting Karl Olson and Tinney was shifted to right field, obviously to return to the mound should the game go into the 13th inning. But the Indians won in the 12th and the victory went to Spencer because he was the pitcher of record when the game was won.

The Buffalo Bisons reclaimed undisputed possession of first place in the International League last night by beating Toronto—and it was former Toronto third baseman PETE CASTIGLIONE who made it possible. Castiglione, a 36-year-old former major league and Indianapolis player, belted a ninth-inning bases-loaded triple to give the Bisons a 5-2 victory over the Maple Leafs. The victory gave the herd a half-game lead over the Richmond Virginians and a full-game edge over third place Toronto.

Blackie Is Back

Wayne Blackburn, popular infielder-outfielder for the Indianapolis Indians in the early '40s, returned to Victory Field last night as a coach for the Charleston Senators. Blackie, normally a scout in the Detroit organization, is helping out Manager Bill Norman who has been advised to stay off the coaching lines until a 25-stitch incision from neck surgery heals.
