

Milwaukee Joins the Beard-Watching Club

LOUISVILLE — Speculation is running rampant again on the possibility of Ted Beard getting another shot in the majors.

But this time it's emanating from another source. The appearance here of Ted McGrew, scout for the Milwaukee Braves, is putting some teeth in reports that the Braves might be interested in the talented little outfielder who is leading the American Association in hitting.

McGrew was a bit evasive when approached on the subject, but he did say "we're hurtin' up there and we've got to get somebody who can play the outfield."

Plagued by injuries, the Braves have been using Del Crandall, a catcher, in the outfield.

McGrew watched Beard and the Indians in the Charleston series at Indianapolis and then followed the club here. It's inconceivable that he would be looking for anyone else.

TED BEARD
Back to Majors?

But there is some doubt whether the Braves could get Beard if they wanted him. The Tribe's working agreement with the Chicago White Sox gives that club first crack at Indianapolis players, and the White Sox once were interested in Beard, and still may be, especially if another club wants him.

The catch to either club getting Beard is that neither is in position to provide an ample replacement—and the player price will be high for any club that wants the heart of the Indianapolis club.

Beard upped his league-leading figure to .343 with one hit in two trips during the Tribe's 15-6 drubbing here last night, and then was taken out to rest some weary legs. It was the first time since May 9 that Teddy didn't finish a game in which he started.

The Tribe's shellacking last night can be summed up in Manager Andy Cohen's terse comment: "It was just Louisville's night."

That it was. Things started going Louisville's way in the first inning when a bad hop on a potential double-play ball eventually led to five earned but undeserved runs.

From then on it was a runaway for the Colonels, who pounded four Tribe hurlers for 14 hits, including four doubles and Vern Rapp's third homer of the season.

They also benefited from seven bases on balls and three Indianapolis errors as the Indians performed as though they were handling hot potatoes in the early innings.

In addition to subduing the Tribe with their solid hitting, the Colonels were making sitting-down and leaping-up catches on defense. Also, the dead calm of a hot and sultry night possibly denied the Indians several home runs.

With any breeze whatsoever, the balls which Joe Macko caught against the fence off the bats of Charley Williams, Neil Chrisley, Ron Jackson and Sam Mele might have gone over.

The irony of the way things went early, enabling Louisville to score 13 runs in the first three innings, was the manner in which the Indians banged away at Dave Benedict, who still was struggling at the finish and who wouldn't have finished had he not had the massive early lead.

The Indians solved the southpaw for 12 hits with Vince Garcia getting a triple, two doubles and a single in a perfect 4-for-4 night. The Indians will make their last appearance of the season here tonight with Barry Latman attempting to get the club back to the .500 level. He will be opposed by Don Rudolph, who has won seven games for the Colonels since being shipped away by Indianapolis.
