

Andy's Pigeons Homing, Eager to Become Spoilers

CHARLESTON—Like horses heading for the barn, the Indianapolis Indians are working themselves into a lather on these last days of a frustrating road trip.

Koelling

They've won two in a row, their longest streak in two weeks, and they'll be home tomorrow for the first of three consecutive double-headers with league-leading Wichita. Seemingly inspired by the approaching home-coming, the Indians galloped to an 8-3 victory over the Senators last night to assume the edge on the season's play.

Virtually resigned to a second-division finish, the Indians have turned to talk of playing the spoiler role against Wichita, and also to winter leagues. They figure that if they can prevent a pennant for Wichita, or at least throw a scare into the Braves, their season will have had some measure of success.

The Tribe has 11 games with the league-leaders, but will meet them in their own park in the last five games of the season. The Indians also have another objective, and that is to finish .500 or above to preserve Andy Cohen's managerial record. The Tribe manager has closed in the second division before, but never has had a club under .500.

The Indianapolis victory last night, behind a sloppy 14-hit outing by Tony Ponce, still left the club 10 games under the .500 mark. With only 16 games remaining, the Indians face the almost impossible task of winning 13 to finish .500 on the nose.

A pregame accident last night put another Tribe player on the casualty list, but the injury is not believed serious. While warming up for infield drill, John Romano was hit on the side of the head by an errant Charleston throw. It was reported that Romano had suffered a slight concussion and was detained in a hospital for observation.

With Romano disabled, Sam Hairston, who already had done an evening's work, filled the catching vacancy. Had he known that he was going to catch a full game, Hairston probably would not have caught the first half of batting practice, then pitched the last half, and wound up the preliminaries by warming up the game pitcher.

Ponce, who likes company, had plenty of it with 16 Charleston batters on base in six of the nine innings. But only three scored as the Senators stole the script from the Indians. Two double plays and a diving, tumbling and rolling catch by Jim Landis rescued Ponce from his most serious jams.

Behind Ponce the Indians also clubbed out 14 hits, including four by Neil Chrisley and three each by Jim Delsing and Jose Valdivielso. One of Delsing's blows was a bases-full double that broke the game for the Indians.

Chrisley's perfect 4-for-4 night included two doubles and hiked his season average to .336, a gain of 6 points in his drive for an outside chance at the league batting championship.

To enhance his chances of acquiring the minimum of 477 plate appearances, Manager Cohen has been batting Chrisley third, where he might pick up an extra appearance in each game.
