

Chisox Won't Pick Tribe's New Boss

By LESTER KOELLING

A successor to Andy Cohen, dismissed today as manager of the Indianapolis Indians, will not be named for some time, but when he is, he will be the "free-hand" choice of Tribe President Ownie Bush.

Bush made it clear today that the Indianapolis manager will not be dictated by the Chicago White Sox, with whom the Indians have a working agreement.

"They (White Sox officials) told me to get whoever I wanted," said Bush, "but naturally I won't name anyone without the approval of the White Sox organization."

Speculation on the new Indianapolis manager immediately turned to Kerby Farrell, who appears headed for the exit as Cleveland's manager. But Bush would make no comment, merely saying "we're not going to be in a hurry to pick a new manager."

It has been reported that if Farrell is ousted at Cleveland, that he will be offered another job in that organization.

"I'm not going to be in a hurry to name a new manager," said Bush. "I expect to get a long list of applicants and I'll try and pick who I think will be best in that list. But we won't select him for quite a while."

In making the announcement of Cohen's dismissal, Bush made the terse comment, "He just didn't suit me as a manager."

Cohen, talking to The News from Chicago where he and Bush attended an organization meeting, said the ouster after one year was more or less unexpected and added that he thought he would "get another chance." He also said that he felt he didn't "do too bad" in view of the injuries to key players, and the loss of Ted Beard (sold to the White Sox) who in Cohen's words was "the heart of my ball club."
