

ball and is known to cherish ambitions for the job.

ONE THING is sure—we need a “name” manager in the saddle out at Victory Field if we are to have a successful year and to keep baseball alive in the city.

Andy Cohen, probably a competent baseball man but not a colorful personality, was a disappointment this year and we saw few tears shed when he was dismissed.

A manager well known to the basefall faithful here should help draw more fans out to Victory Field and aid Bill Warren, the Tribe's new promotion man, in attaining his goal of 300,000 paid admissions for the season.
