

Miner Diamondmen Seek Road Victory In Contest With Lobos

University of Texas at El Paso's baseball team has a phobia for streaks.

Earlier this season Andy Cohen's diamondmen lost nine out of 10 games, then came back with nine straight wins. They have currently lost eight of their last nine, including five straight.

The Miners are also looking for their first road win in six starts.

U.T. El Paso will be out to rectify that situation this weekend when it takes on the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque for a three-game series.

A couple of timely hits last week could have given the Miners at least three victories in five games, instead of five losses. U.T. El Paso left 37 men stranded on the base paths last week and only had 14 men cross the plate.

Arizona's highly touted starters were knocked out of the box early in both games Friday, but came up with strong relief pitching to bail it out.

The Wildcats, defending Western Athletic Conference champs, showed mid-season fielding form as they turned in five doubleplays in Friday's seven-inning tilt.

U.T. El Paso's batsmen continue to bang out the hits, although some of their batting averages dropped during the week.

Outfielder Bob Prokopowicz, slowed by an injury, dropped out of the elite .400 class to .390. Second baseman Terry Baker dropped from .372 to .340 and first baseman Barry Alburdis had his .311 mark trimmed to .290. Third baseman Gary Molberg upped his season mark from .326 to .343 with a 7-16 performance.

New Mexico's hot hitting Lobos will be waiting for the Miners. The Lobos, 18-13 team batting average. UNM has already set a school record for extra base hits in a season.
