

Tribe Seeks Field Boss

INDIANAPOLIS (UP) — Indications were today that the choice for manager of the Indianapolis Indians of the American Association has been narrowed to half a dozen candidates, among them former Cleveland manager Kerby Farrell.

Club President Owen (Ownie) Bush listed four other baseball veterans—Johnny Riddle, Clyde King, Don Osborn and Rollie Hemsley. He said the sixth has not been contacted and his name, therefore, would not be disclosed.

Farrell managed Indianapolis to the Little World Series championship last year before his one-year stint in the big leagues. Riddle, an Indianapolis resident, recently lost his job as coach of the Milwaukee Braves. King managed at Hollywood and Atlanta. He is a former Indianapolis pitcher. Hemsley previously had Triple-A managerial experience at Columbus and piloted Miami during the past season.

The new manager will succeed Andy Cohen, whose contract was not renewed after the 1957 campaign.
