

Miners Not 'Bush' As Cats Figured

University of Arizona baseball team had come and gone today with the best of a three game series over Andy Cohen's U.T. El Paso Miners, but had found the Miners weren't as "bush" as they had first figured.

The Wildcats split a double-header with the Miners Saturday, taking the first 6-5 and dropping the second 8-7.

Instead of unloading a great barrage of wood on the Miners, the Arizona bats had been held in tap by the Miner pitching.

THE WILDCATS found the pitching was as strong as any they'd face this year. Especially when they faced freshman lefthander Jim Greggeron in the final outing.

"Greggeron just got stronger as he went along," said Cohen. "He had one bad inning, but other than that he held them real well."

Cohen added, "I was real happy the way we played Arizona and think if we hadn't of made some small mistakes we could have taken all three."

TOMORROW the Miners are scheduled to meet New Mexico State at Dudley Field. But with arrival of the Sun Kings the game may be switched to Las Cruces.

Two of the Aggie aces are injury trouble and won't likely see action against the Miners. The Ags are led at the bat by Rex Gates (.377) and J. McTeer (.323).
