There Is a Lot of Silver In Those Aluminum Cans

Every Tuesday and Thursday between noon and 3 p.m., a long line of cars and trucks parade into the work yard of the Dickshire Co. at 203 North Chelsea street, distributors of KINGSTON, R.I. (UPI) — The Reynolds Metal Co. plans to open 16 centers across the country to reclaim aluminum scrap metal in the form of empty cans.

Dr. Robert F. Testin, director of environmental planning for the Richmond, Va., based firm, told a regional antipollution conference at the University of Rhode Island a pilot center already has been set up in Los Angeles.

Coor's Beer, and starts unloading bags and cartons of cans.

The cans are weighed and dumped into a huge bin, and the drivers in the parade go away with 10 cents in their pockets for each pound of cans they've delivered. A good part of the collection is sent to Coor's headquarters in Colorado for recycling and reprocessing. Another part is reprocessed locally.

IT'S ALL PART of Dickshire's contribution to the Beautiful El Paso move, and some statistics concerning the program were supplied yesterday by Richard Azar, head of Dickshire, and by Andy Cohen, who heads the Beautiful El Paso Ass'n. and also works for Dickshire.

The program of buying used cans (aluminum only) has been in effect for about a year. As of yesterday, 81,186 pounds of cans (representing 1,867,278 cans) have been turned in, and $8,118.60 has been paid to those who collected them.

The program began slowly, but as word spread the number of cans increased until today about 30 per cent of all Coor's beer cans sold in this area are being turned in. It's hoped this figure will climb to 50 per cent by mid-September.

MR. AZAR said the program is in effect in all 11 states in which Coor's is distributed, but has been particularly effective here, where organizations—such as church groups and Scout troops—as well as individuals, have established "routes" along which they collect the cans for redemption.

He pointed out that the glass manufacturers association has just begun a similar program for redeeming glass bottles to help lessen litterbugging, and that reclaiming of cardboard cartons already is an established business, though no recycling plant for cartons is located here, and the nearest is in Chihuahua.

The can reclamation program, he said, can be effective only as long as there is financial incentive to gather and reuse the aluminum.

Commerce Secretary Plans El Paso Visit

Secretary of Commerce Maurice H. Stans will be in El Paso August 3 for a short visit said Richard L. Hurt, public information specialist for the U.S. Department of Commerce, in an announcement yesterday.

Stans will be accompanied by Hilary Sandoval, Small Business Administration director.

IT IS EXPECTED that the Commerce Secretary and Sandoval plan a review of federal programs designed to help minority businessmen.

Richard Will, special assistant to the secretary for the Office of Minority Business Enterprises and Allen-Stephenson, program officer in the Dept. of Commerce, were also in El Paso yesterday. They called on Mayor Pete De Wetter to lay plans for Stans' visit.

The Office of Minority Business Enterprises was created by President Nixon in March 1969 in order to provide more federal assistance to minority persons seeking to establish or expand existing businesses and provide an advisory council of outstanding private citizens.

tributes to Jim G. Lucas, Pulitzer Prize-winning war correspondent for the Scripps-Howard newspapers, who died here of cancer early yesterday. He was 56.

"The untimely death of Jim Lucas is a heavy blow to scores of friends and countless readers who cherished the integrity, candor and accuracy of his reporting," the President said. "He will be deeply missed, but affectionately remembered."

"AS HIS CAREER merits respect and his life admiration, his memory will provide the inspiration for members of his profession and for the fellow Americans he served so well."

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. at Joseph Gawler's Sons Funeral Home here (5130 Wisconsin Ave., N.W.).

Gen. Lewis W. Walt, assistant commandant of the Marine Corps, will deliver a eulogy. The services will be conducted by Capt. John J. O'Connor, a Navy chaplain who has served with the marines.

BURIAL LATER will be at Checotah, Okla., Lucas's birthplace.

Spiro T. Agnew, who first met Lucas six months ago when he began work on a biography of the Vice President, recalled that he had recognized at once why Lucas "was regarded as such a great reporter, particularly by the servicemen whom he loved."

"He will be missed by hundreds of GIs and former GIs who came to know him personally and admire him, and by thousands of readers to whom the byline Jim G. Lucas became familiar and dependable through the years," the Vice-President said.

"I, TOO, SHALL miss him. He was, above all, a fair and honest newsman. I am privileged and honored that his last major project was to write a book about me."

Lucas's book, "Agnew, Profile in Conflict," will be published Friday.

Jack R. Howard, president and general editorial manager of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers, said.

"As a friend and associate, I mourn for Jim Lucas, a great reporter and a great human being whose courage was matched by his compassion."

"THREE DECADES as a renowned, prize-winning war correspondent, Jim stumbled across hot, sandy beaches; lifted heavy boots along icy trails, and sloshed through jungle mud to chronicle the story of this country's fighting men."

"He saw them at their worst and at their best. He never lost faith in them—or in mankind. This is the way we will remember him."

Bliss GIs Give Blood for Boy's Operation

To help a 15-year-old El Paso boy walk again, Ft. Bliss soldiers responded in large numbers to a direct appeal blood drive conducted during the past few weeks.

The patient, Kevin Nickerbocker, son of M-Sgt. (retired) and Mrs. Clyde Baker, 3725 Waycross, suffers from hemophilia, a condition of the blood which prevents rapid clotting and causes profuse and uncontrolled bleeding from any cut or wound. Kevin was crippled by a shortened tendon in his ankle, a common problem of hemophiliacs. To doctors who examined the boy, it became evident that an operation would have to be performed in order to lengthen the tendon.

Such an operation cannot be performed on a hemophiliac without large amounts of blood plasma on hand for transfusions, to speed the process of clotting. Early in June a direct appeal drive was initiated to obtain the plasma needed to perform the operation. During the first few days, some 200 units of blood were collected from a hundred donors.

Doctors at William Beaumont General Hospital began transfusing the plasma into Kevin's bloodstream a day before the operation, because of the need to build up the plasma to a normal level prior to surgery. The operation was performed on June 23. Plasma transfusions were necessary for a week following the operation, to keep the boy's circulatory system functioning normally while the bleeding slowed. Over 600 units of plasma were obtained in the drive, well over the estimated goal of 400, and nearly all the units had to be used before clotting was achieved, bleeding stopped, and the boy's system returned to normal.

The soldiers at Ft. Bliss, whose response to the blood drive made the operation possible, were members of the 1st Advanced Individual Training Brigade, the Air Defense School Support Command, Air Defense Center Headquarters Command, the Defense Language Institute — Southwest Branch at Biggs Field, and the 6th and 15th Artillery Groups.

In the operation, the tendon was lengthened and calcium deposits were removed from Kevin's ankle. Major Richard A. Binder, a Beaumont hematologist, remarked that the boy's recovery was extremely good.

This week, Kevin Nickerbocker is going home. His parents express their deepest gratitude to everyone whose help made the successful operation possible.
